DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

"Elim," located on the brow of a plateau overlooking the North River one-and-a-quarter miles east of Bethel, Missouri, is a central hall symmetrical plan, two-and-a-half story, brick and stone house built in the late 1840's by the members of the "Society of Bethel." The house served as the residence of the society's founder, Dr. William Keil, and as the recreation center for the society's members. Painted pink with dark green trim, it has a full basement, a simple ridge roof, and two porches.

EXTERIOR

The north, front facade of the structure is symmetrical in design. The first story is characterized by a central double doorway flanked by two small narrow windows, one to each side. To either side of this central unit are two evenly spaced larger windows. The second story has a central window over the entranceway with two windows to either side directly above those of the first story. This fenestration is repeated on the south, rear side.

Both the north and south facades support single story porches that were added at a later date. The north porch, constructed of stone and brick, covers the central doorway and extends around the north-west corner of the house spanning one-third of the west gable wall. The south porch, constructed of wood covered with clapboard, occupies only the central area between the two outermost windows of the south facade.

The east and west sides of the building are stepped gable wall, each ending in a double chimney included within and flush with the exterior wall. Both double chimneys are centrally located and flanked by a single window to each side on the first, second and attic floors. The "step" in the gables above the roof line indicates the previous existence of an upward extension of the attic. This attic half story was wood frame covered with clapboard and was used for drying herbs. Small two-paned windows arranged in line with the first and second story openings below, lined its north and south sides, while a single such window pierced the gable wall at each end. This half-story was destroyed by a tornado during the 1920's, and the roof was converted to a common ridge roof. A visible break in the roofing material also indicates this loss.

The exterior walls rest on a limestone foundation of ranged ashlar extending about two and a half feet above the ground. The walls themselves are constructed of locally made brick laid according to the American bond method. All the windows have wood frames with limestone sills and lintels, with the exception of those on the south facade which have brick lintels. All the first story windows have nine over six light sash, while those of the second and third stories have six over six light sash. The roofing material is now composition shingles but was originally wood shingles.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

"Elim," located one-and-a-quarter miles east of Bethel, Shelby County, Missouri, is significant as the home of Dr. William Keil, the founder of the "Society of Bethel," the most successful communistic society established in Missouri and one of the most successful in the United States (previously nominated to the National Register of Historic Places under the title "Bethel Historic District").

William Keil was born March 6, 1811, in Bleicherode, Prussia, where he was reared and trained as a tailor. At the age of twenty-four he immigrated to the United States, assumed the title of "Doctor" and established himself as a "magical healer" in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. While in Pennsylvania, Keil converted to Methodism and became a preacher first in the Methodist Episcopal Church and later in the Methodist Protestant Church. Influenced by the communistic principles of George Rapp's Economy Colony, Keil eventually severed his connections with Methodism to form his own sect. (William G. Bek, "From Bethel, Missouri, To Aurora, Oregon, Letters of William Keil, 1855-1870," Missouri Historical Review, 48:25, October, 1953, and Henry Taylor, General History of Shelby County, Missouri, Chicago: Henry Taylor Co., 1911, p. 172.) In 1844, he led a band of followers, mainly Rappists who believed as he did in the advantages of communistic living, to found a communal colony in Shelby County, Missouri. (William G. Bek, "A German Communistic Society in Missouri," Missouri Historical Review, 3:69, October, 1908.) The colony, named Bethel, existed from 1844 to 1879 without semblance of a constitutional agreement. It had no peculiar dress, nor singular customs. The sole bond of union was the magnetic power and iron will of Keil who served as its founder, administrator, preacher and physician.

The brethren felt Keil to be the wisest of men and erected "Elim" as his residence. The house not only served as Keil's dwelling, but also as the seat of his administrative powers and the herbarium where his medicinal herbs were cured and stored for use in his role as colony physician. The house was also the scene of several annual festivals including Keil's birthday, Easter, Pentecost and the autumn Harvest-feast. On all these occasions, a procession formed in Bethel and, led by the colony band, marched to "Elim" where feasts followed by dances were held in the large, second-story banquet hall. (Charles

"ELIM," HOME OF DR. WILLIAM KEIL

INTERIOR

The first floor is divided by a wide, central hall penetrating the entire depth of the building. An identical double door is located at each end of the hall and access can be gained from either direction. Four rooms of equal dimension flank the hall, two to each side. A straight stair at the west side of the hallway leads to the second level which was originally one large banquet room. This is now divided into four smaller bedrooms. The attic area is sealed off.

The woodwork, doors and handrails are solid walnut, while the floors are oak. All the wood is original.

"ELIM," HOME OF DR. WILLIAM KEIL

Nordhoff, The Communistic Societies of the United States, 1875, reprint 1960, pp. 309-329.)

By 1854, Keil decided to create another communal colony in the less crowded Pacific Northwest. In 1855 he migrated to Washington Territory, but finally settled in Oregon's Willamette River Valley where he died in 1877. Bereft of the direct guidance of their leader, the Bethel Colony dwindled and disbanded, dividing the community holdings among them. (Ralph Albertson, "A Survey of Mutualistic Communities in America," The Iowa Journal of History and Politics, 34:387, October, 1936.) Following disbandment, "Elim" was purchased by George Lair, a former colony member, and is still occupied by his descendants today.

The survey of Missouri's sites of historical and architectural significance is based on the selection of sites as they relate to theme studies in Missouri history as outlined in "Missouri's Comprehensive Statewide Historic Preservation Plan." "Elim" is, therefore, being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places because, as the home of the founder and leader of a successful utopian society, it relates to the theme of "Social Improvement" in Missouri's Northeast Prairie Region.
